III. JOHN PAUL II, PASTORES DABO VOBIS, 50.

IV. BENEDICT XVI, SACRAMENT OF CHARITY, 24-25

"His disciples said to him, "If that is the case of a man with his wife (indissolubility of marriage), it is better not to marry. He answered, "Not all can accept this word, but only those to whom that is granted. Some are incapable of marriage because they were born this way from their mother's womb; there are some who were made eunuchs by men; some made themselves eunuchs for the sake of the Kingdom of Heaven. Whoever can accept this ought to accept it." (Mt 19, 10-12)

"An unmarried man is anxious about the things of the Lord. But a married man is anxious about the things of the world, how he may please his wife, and he is divided. An unmarried woman or virgin is anxious about the things of the Lord, so that she may be holy in body and spirit. A married woman, on the other hand, is anxious about the things of the world, how she may please her husband. I am telling this for your own benefit, not to impose a restraint upon you, but for the sake of propriety and adherence to the Lord without distraction." (I Cor 7, 32-35)

"And they (the Pharisees and their scribes) said to Him: The disciples of John fast often and offer prayers, and the disciples of the Pharisees do the same, but yours eat and drink." Jesus answered them: "Can you make the wedding guests fast while the Bridegroom is with them? But days will come, and when the Bridegroom is taken away from them, then they will fast in those days." (Lk 5, 33-35) And he also told them a parable: no one tears a piece from a new cloak to patch an old one. Otherwise, he will tear the new and the piece from it will not match the old cloak. Likewise, no one pours new wine into old wineskins. Otherwise the new wine will burst the skins, and it will be spilled, and the skins will be ruined. Rather, new wine must be poured into fresh wineskins. (And) no one who has been drinking old wine desires new, for he says, "The old is good". (Lk 5, 36-39)

I. INTRODUCTION

God's promise of the Messiah to be born from Israel, established among the Israelites that marriage was part of their religious Covenant with God, as a People. I.e. The many battles, a long captivity in Babylon, the slavery in Egypt, down numbered the People of God and they were at risk of disappearing from the face of the earth. (Dan 3, 29-37) For this reason, the Levites established marriage as a religious duty, even among them (the Levites), and for each and every Israelite, and a part of the covenant with God (Lev 21, 1-4 & 7-9; Judges 11, 36-40). They had to be married and have children for this was the greatest blessing, for all mankind (Gen 15, 1-5); the Savior of the world was coming. (Gen 15, 2 & 17, 3-8; Ex 13,11-12).

Then, every good Israelite that fulfilled the law of God got married when attaining a proper age. The exception to the rule were the Esenians; they were single persons who had to settle outside the community of Israel, to dedicate to a life of prayer and spiritual combat with evil, like monks or religious do today. They would not marry and be dedicated to God, just like John the Baptist did (Mt 3, 1-6; Jn 1, 23).

Also, the Virgin Mary had to get married to Saint Joseph, obedient to the laws of Israel though planning to remain Virgin, as announced by Isaiah (Is 7, 14), and as referred to in the book of Genesis (Gen 3, 16) and Revelation (Rev 12); and she conceived Christ from the Holy Spirit (Mt 1, 18).

When Christ started public life and chose the Twelve Apostles, they were good men of their time who obeyed the laws of the Old Covenant, just like the Virgin Mary, the Mother of God (Luke 4, 38). All were married according to the traditions of the Leviticus; except for a teenager among the Twelve, John, who never knew wife and had no children. The Gospel writer referred to him as "the disciple that Jesus loved" (like Lazarus, referred by his sisters as "the one that you (Jesus) love" (Jn 11, 3)). The comment about John, from the scene of the Last Supper (Jn 13, 22-23) reveals the single-heartedness of this young disciple, who was later found at the feet of the Cross of Christ. And by the way, this does not mean that later on, neither of the other disciples surrendered their own lives in Christ, the Eternal Priest, and for His Church.

The one and only archetype of priesthood that there is in the New Covenant is Jesus Christ, the "Eternal Priest". Not Simon Peter, nor John, nor any of the other Apostles, for that matter. Christ Himself, In Person, is the Institution of Priesthood (Mt 26, 26-29). He is the One and Only Model, and He in Person is the Church's Spouse (Jn 3, 29). We can all find the amazing nuptial language of the Gospels, that Christ uses to describe Himself, or John the Baptist, who called himself "the friend of the Bridegroom", and so Christ, the Bridegroom. (Lk 5, 34-35; Jn 3, 28-30).

Christ becomes the Grace. And the Blessed Virgin Mary, without doubt, Mother and Mediatrix (Jn 2, 3-5). The priest's ontological identity is his being Christ's Minister (envoy) whom he represents before the People of the New Alliance, In Persona, sealing the sacrament of Ordination. By the command of Christ, the priest is able to repeat His Words and Signs in the Sacraments of Redemption. Through him, Christ brings the Oneness of the One and Only Sacrifice of the Eternal Priest, in the Eucharist: celebrated by Him, once and for all time, for the Church.

In the early community, the Gift of Christ Himself, celibacy, was understood gradually (I Tim 3, 2; I Cor 7, 32-35). It was later on that celibacy was installed as discipline and law, in the Latin Church, as the II Vatican Council declares (Prosbiterorum Ordinis, 16). Celibacy is Christ's own new creation, and the priestly form to act In Persona Christi. This meant a revolution in the religious culture of all times. Christ's Gift for the Church is, total and to all.

The Latin Church nurtures this manner of Gift, according to her own Master. But it took the first few centuries for priestly celibacy to be established, at large. There was no systematic Seminary formation for the candidates, until later. (Eastern Churches require celibacy from bishops, not from priests. The Latin Church, on the other hand, requires it from priests, and therefore bishops, but not from permanent deacons. Permanent diaconate brings an ordained ministry for those who are married and are called to serve in a part-time life commitment in the Church, while their spouses, children and family obligations are still their first duty).

The previously engaged sacrament of Marriage establishes that no one can faithfully care for "two wives or marriage commitments", with the children and obvious responsibilities. Either one wife will get jealous, or be abandoned. It is not only because of administrative and practical reasons that priests should remain celibate (i.e. the cost of maintenance of their wives and children to the Church's expense: food, clothes, health, college, transportation, etc.), nor only because there is the reality of the mutual conjugal obligations as spouses, that can easily generate conflicts of interest among the two, to the expense of the congregation.

There are true ontological reasons, to the being priest. There is the need for years of discernment of the call, and formation, in following the vocation to priesthood. Nonetheless having the grace to respond to the call for his personal gift of self, in celibacy state. Then, the Sacrament is celebrated that seals and consecrates his being to act "In Persona Christi".

This enables him to celebrate the Eucharist and pronounce Christ's own words, which is in union with the Father, through the Holy Spirit. The Transubstantiation of the wine and bread into His Body and Blood during Consecration; to pardon sins in His Name during the sacrament of Penance, take place through the canon of actions and words, emerge mainly from Christ in the Gospel, and the Apostolic Tradition, as pronounced by the priest. All the sacraments of redemption, as well. Here, it is agreeable to say that the full priesthood is exercised by the Bishop, who is able to ordain priests, and celebrate Confirmation, as well; all seven sacraments.

A new sacred relationship with the People of God is created, and a new way of being is established, at the moment of the Ordination of a priest. A thorough discernment though, and solid formation in the seminary; a life of prayer, service and sacrifice, with the grace of God, and the sacrament, assists the priest to live this special union with God, in service to His People.

Celibacy cannot be lived nor justified, by itself. It can only be lived for the greater cause, given the nature of human sexuality. Celibacy promotes the attitude of gift of self, and openness to every person (Eph 5, 22-25); it fulfills the priestly heart and the human need of becoming what God calls him to be.

There is a profound analogy in the relation Christ-Church, and the relation husband-wife, as total gift of self. It defines the only two great vocations that exist: marriage and family; and virginity & celibacy for the Kingdom of God. In "redemption" terms, the sacrament of marriage takes its measure from this Great Sacrament: the love of Christ and the Church, in total gift of self, even to the point of the sacrifice in the Cross. Both vocations require one total gift, in an indissoluble unity, faithfully lived, that generates new life, in Christ.

The Doctrine of the Church is eloquent in proclaiming priestly celibacy, even from the beginning of Christianity. Some of the latest documents can clarify the matter and are included here. This is our faith and in this we assent, with the doctrine of the Church.

(NOTE: Women priests? Christ with all His Divine Authority could have first ordained His own Mother, even before the Apostles, as she is the most excellent Woman ever, who could be candidate for priesthood. But He didn't. For who, as woman, or even as man, could ever be the other suitable person for priesthood than her, Our Blessed Mother, since she is the other only human being able to say, as Her own words, in truth: "This is My Body, This is My Blood"?... since Christ's own Body and Blood were exactly from her!

So, in that perspective, it would be impossible for any other man or any other woman to truly say: "This is my Body, This is My Blood".

But Christ willed to call men and to make them participants of His own sacramental Priesthood. And He, and His Father, also willed to call women to Motherhood, which is faithful priesthood on its own, in Christ, and is also from the Spirit.

So, the Church has no Holy Spirit to ordain women. The Church's role is being faithful to her Lord. And as for Both, Christ and the Church, and therefore their wedded union, their roles, it is certain that the Bridegroom's and the Bride's are specific roles, harmonious, complementary, life-giving. This "specificity" of roles of Man and Woman, saves in and for us all, the truth of our beings, from the destruction of de-becoming who we are created to be.

There is nothing more sacred than the Sacraments. Marriage, as the Image of the Great Sacrament that is, the Love of Christ for His Church, remains, to Man and Woman, the greatest and the only one prototype for married, human love, in the divine plan: the total gift-of-self, as the life-giving love.

That precisely answers another modern question: What about homosexual marriage? ... The response is: ...Impossible!

Still, some might ask, and what about homosexual priests? ... Well, this question was already answered by Christ at the beginning of this article (Mt 19, 10-12), so there is nothing to be added to what He teaches to us.

II. VATICAN COUNCIL, DECREE ON THE MINISTRY AND LIFE OF PRIESTS, 16

16. Celibacy is to be embraced and esteemed as a gift. Perfect and perpetual continence for the sake of the Kingdom of Heaven, commended by Christ the Lord (33) and through the course of time as well as in our own days freely accepted and observed in a praiseworthy manner by many of the faithful, is held by the Church to be of great value in a special manner for the priestly life. It is at the same time a sign and a stimulus for pastoral charity and a special source of spiritual fecundity in the world. (34) Indeed, it is not demanded by the very nature of the priesthood, as is apparent from the practice of the early Church (35) and from the traditions of the Eastern Churches, where, besides those who with all the bishops, by a gift of grace, choose to observe celibacy, there are also married priests of highest merit. This Holy Synod, while it commends ecclesiastical celibacy, in no way intends to alter that different discipline which legitimately flourishes in the Eastern Churches. It permanently exhorts all those who have received the priesthood and marriage to persevere in their holy vocation so that they may fully and generously continue to expend themselves for the sake of the flock commended to them.

Indeed, celibacy has a many-faceted suitability for the priesthood. For the whole priestly mission is dedicated to the service of a new humanity which Christ, the victor over death, has aroused through his Spirit in the world and which has its origin "not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man but of God (Jn 1:13). Through virginity, then, or celibacy observed for the Kingdom of Heaven, (37) priests are consecrated to Christ by a new and exceptional reason. They adhere to him more easily with an undivided heart,(38) they dedicate themselves more freely in him and through him to the service of God and men, and they more expeditiously minister to his Kingdom and the work of heavenly regeneration, and thus they are apt to accept, in a broad sense, paternity in Christ. In this way they profess themselves before men as willing to be dedicated to the office committed to them-namely, to commit themselves faithfully to one man and to show themselves as a chaste virgin for Christ(39) and thus to evoke the mysterious marriage established by Christ, and fully to be manifested in the future, in which the Church has Christ as her only Spouse.(40) They give, moreover, a living sign of the world to come, by a faith and charity already made present, in which the children of the resurrection neither marry nor take wives.(41)

For these reasons, based on the mystery of Christ and his mission, celibacy, which first was recommended to priests, later in the Latin Church was imposed upon all who were to be promoted to sacred orders. This legislation, pertaining to those who are destined for the priesthood, this holy synod again approves and confirms, fully trusting this gift of the Spirit so fitting for the priesthood of the New Testament, freely given by the Father, provided that those who participate in the priesthood of Christ through the sacrament of Orders-and also the whole Church-humbly and fervently pray for it. This sacred synod also exhorts all priests who, in following the example of Christ, freely receive sacred celibacy as a grace of God, that they magnanimously and wholeheartedly adhere to it, and that persevering faithfully in it, they may acknowledge this outstanding gift of the Father which is so openly praised and extolled by the Lord. (42) Let them keep before their eyes the great mysteries signified by it and fulfilled in it. Insofar as perfect continence is thought by many men to be impossible in our times, to that extent priests should all the more humbly and steadfastly pray with the Church for that grace of fidelity, which is never denied those who seek it, and use all the supernatural and natural aids available. They should especially seek, lest they omit them, the ascetical norms which have been proved by the experience of the Church and which are scarcely less necessary in the contemporary world. This Holy Synod asks not only priests but all the faithful that they might receive this precious gift of priestly celibacy in their hearts and ask of God that he will always bestow this gift upon his Church.

III. JOHN PAUL II, PASTORES DABO VOBIS, # 50.

The spiritual formation of one who is called to live celibacy should pay particular attention to preparing the future priest so that he may know, appreciate, love and live celibacy according to its true nature and according to its real purposes, that is, for evangelical, spiritual and pastoral motives. The virtue of chastity is a premise for this preparation and is its content. It colors all human relations and leads "to experiencing and showing...a sincere, human, fraternal and personal love, one that is capable of sacrifice, following Christ's example, a love for all and for each person."(151)

The celibacy of priests brings with it certain characteristics thanks to which they renounce marriage for the sake of the kingdom of heaven (cf. Mt. 19:12) and hold fast to their Lord with that undivided love which is profoundly in harmony with the new covenant; they bear witness to the resurrection in a future life (cf. Lk. 20:36) and obtain the most useful assistance toward the constant exercise of that perfect charity by which they can become all things to all men in their priestly ministry."(152) And so priestly celibacy should not be considered just as a legal norm or as a totally external condition for admission to ordination, but rather as a value that is profoundly connected with ordination, whereby a man takes on the likeness of Jesus Christ, the good shepherd and spouse of the Church, and therefore as a choice of a greater and undivided love for Christ and his Church, as a full and joyful availability in his heart for the pastoral ministry. Celibacy is to be considered as a special grace, as a gift, for "not all men can receive this saying, but only those to whom it is given" (Mt. 19:11). Certainly it is a grace which does not dispense with, but counts most definitely on, a conscious and free response on the part of the receiver. This charism of the Spirit also brings with it the grace for the receiver to remain faithful to it for all his life and be able to carry out generously and joyfully its concomitant commitments. Formation in priestly celibacy should also include helping people to be aware of the "precious gift of God,"(153) which will lead to prayer and to vigilance in guarding the gift from anything which could put it under threat.

Through his celibate life, the priest will be able to fulfill better his ministry on behalf of the People of God. In particular, as he witnesses to the evangelical value of virginity, he will be able to aid Christian spouses to live fully the "great sacrament" of the love of Christ the bridegroom for his spouse the Church, just as his own faithfulness to celibacy will help them to be faithful to each other as husband and wife. (154)

The importance of a careful preparation for priestly celibacy, especially in the social and cultural situations that we see today, led the synod fathers to make a series of requests which have a permanent value, as the wisdom of our mother the Church confirms. I authoritatively set them down again as criteria to be followed in formation for chastity in celibacy: "Let the bishops together with the rectors and spiritual directors of the seminaries establish principles, offer criteria and give assistance for discernment in this matter. Of the greatest importance for formation for chastity in celibacy are the bishop's concern and fraternal life among priests. In the seminary, that is, in the program of formation, celibacy should be presented clearly, without any ambiguities and in a positive fashion. The seminarian should have a sufficient degree of psychological and sexual maturity as well as an assiduous and authentic life of prayer, and he should put himself under the direction of a spiritual father. The spiritual director should help the seminarian so that he himself reaches a mature and free decision, which is built on esteem for priestly friendship and self-discipline, as well as on the acceptance of solitude and on a physically and psychologically sound personal state. Therefore, seminarians should have a good knowledge of the teaching of the Second Vatican Council, of the encyclical Sacerdotalis Coelibatus and the Instruction for Formation in Priestly Celibacy published by the Congregation for Catholic Education in 1974. In order that the seminarian may be able to embrace priestly celibacy for the kingdom of heaven with a free decision, he needs to know the Christian and truly human nature and purpose of sexuality in marriage and in celibacy. It is necessary also to instruct and educate the lay faithful regarding the evangelical, spiritual and pastoral reasons proper to priestly celibacy so that they will help priests with their friendship, understanding and cooperation."(155)

IV. BENEDICT XVI, SACRAMENT OF CHARITY, 24- 25

The Eucharist and priestly celibacy

24. The Synod Fathers wished to emphasize that the ministerial priesthood, through ordination, calls for complete configuration to Christ. While respecting the different practice and tradition of the Eastern Churches, there is a need to reaffirm the profound meaning of priestly celibacy, which is rightly considered a priceless treasure, and is also confirmed by the Eastern practice of choosing Bishops only from the ranks of the celibate. These Churches also greatly esteem the decision of many priests to embrace celibacy. This choice on the part of the priest expresses in a special way the dedication which conforms him to Christ and his exclusive offering of himself for the Kingdom of God. 75) The fact that Christ himself, the eternal priest, lived his mission even to the sacrifice of the Cross in the state of virginity constitutes the sure point of reference for understanding the meaning of the tradition of the Latin Church. It is not sufficient to understand priestly celibacy in purely functional terms. Celibacy is really a special way of conforming oneself to Christ's own way of life. This choice has first and foremost a nuptial meaning; it is a profound identification with the heart of Christ the Bridegroom who gives his life for his Bride. In continuity with the great ecclesial tradition, with the Second Vatican Council (76) and with my predecessors in the papacy, (77) I reaffirm the beauty and the importance of a priestly life lived in celibacy as a sign expressing total and exclusive devotion to Christ, to the Church and to the Kingdom of God, and I therefore confirm that it remains obligatory in the Latin tradition. Priestly celibacy lived with maturity, joy and dedication is an immense blessing for the Church and for society itself.

The clergy shortage and the pastoral care of vocations

25. In the light of the connection between the sacrament of Holy Orders and the Eucharist, the Synod considered the difficult situation that has arisen in various Dioceses which face a shortage of priests. This happens not only in some areas of first evangelization, but also in many countries of long-standing Christian tradition. Certainly a more equitable distribution of clergy would help to solve the problem. Efforts need to be made to encourage a greater awareness of this situation at every level. Bishops should involve Institutes of Consecrated Life and the new ecclesial groups in their pastoral needs, while respecting their particular charisms, and they should invite the clergy to become more open to serving the Church wherever there is need, even if this calls for sacrifice. (78) The Synod also discussed pastoral initiatives aimed at promoting, especially among the young, an attitude of interior openness to a priestly calling. The situation cannot be resolved by purely practical decisions. On no account should Bishops react to real and understandable concerns about the shortage of priests by failing to carry out adequate vocational discernment, or by admitting to seminary formation and ordination candidates who lack the necessary qualities for priestly ministry (79). An insufficiently formed clergy, admitted to ordination without the necessary discernment, will not easily be able to offer a witness capable of evoking in others the desire to respond generously to Christ's call.

The pastoral care of vocations needs to involve the entire Christian community in every area of its life. (80) Obviously, this pastoral work on all levels also includes exploring the matter with families, which are often indifferent or even opposed to the idea of a priestly vocation. Families should generously embrace the gift of life and bring up their children to be open to doing God's will. In a word, they must have the courage to set before young people the radical decision to follow Christ, showing them how deeply rewarding it is.

Note:

(The conversion to Catholicism of many Anglican traditional groups because of the increasing deviation from their own protestant reform (i.e. women bishops, homosexual bishops, etc.), has introduced new questions: Are married Anglican ministers going to serve in the Catholic Church? Shall married protestant ministers that enter the Catholic Church be automatically recognized as priests? Shall then the Church admit married priesthood? These are the kind of questions that one should rather ask to Pope Benedict XVI and the communion of all Bishops in the Church. And I think that they are being answered already by their Magisterium and how the Holy Spirit guides the Church. New dialogues are now undergoing in Rome to review the instances in this matter, since the Church always looks for the Unity of Christians ("One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism." as St. Paul reminds us). -without compromising the Faith, the Doctrine, and the Moral. The new "Ecclesiola" or small department structure built within the "Catholic umbrella", to protect the Anglicans, supported by the Church, in no way has to undermine the apostolic tradition of two millennia from Christ on the Rock of Peter and the Apostles, and has been found the solution pointing towards the desired unity of Christians.

If the sacrament of Ordination according to the Church, as one of the Seven Sacraments of Redemption which, are not as acceptable to the Church of Reformation as they are Canons in the Catholic Church, (i.e. the sacrament of Reconciliation or Penance, the sacrament of Marriage, the sacrament of Priesthood...); therefore, it seems that the sacraments are not celebrated from the same spirit, meaning, interpretation, acceptance, structure, origin, tradition, as in the Catholic Church.

By definition, the original Anglican Reform's bishops are not in communion with the Pope nor the Bishops of the Catholic Apostolic Roman Church, therefore priestly and episcopal ordinations are not "automatically valid", without first a full communion in the faith, at large.

In the Catholic Church, priesthood has specific requirements, discernment, formation, and the sacrament of Ordination can only be provided by a Bishop in Communion with the Church, according to Rome's Mandate.

Even though two or three English Catholic Bishops would personally agree to desire the approval of these married men to become Catholic priests, and who were ministers in the Anglican tradition of the Reform, the English Catholic Bishops would have to continue to submit themselves to the law of the Catholic Apostolic Roman Church, in its integrity. This matter is not local, nor for national decision, but rather, a matter that affect the law and discipline, and faith of the Universal Church. But certainly, as converted men to Catholicism, the ex-Anglican married ministers could qualify to the Ordained Diaconate given the specific conditions and the specific formation that is required from those who are to receive this sacrament, without any doubt. But not as a first new step in the Church, towards making priests from those who are married, as its implicit goal.

On the other hand, statistics reveal that there is a high rate of divorce among married protestant priestly ministers, because many times they end up adhering, preferably, to their congregation and to its service, rather than to their wife, children, work, and other responsibilities that they committed in their vows. This could be a reason why some Anglican ministers are accepted as homosexuals, some are divorced so there is not the impediment. And many of the protestant married ministers who serve their congregation, found out later that they needed to solicit a secular job outside their congregation, because monies paid by the congregation were insufficient to sustain them and their own families, and therefore, they had to abandon the ministry, forced by circumstance).

(Pray for more new, young, numerous, and saintly vocations to priesthood. Pray for the families, since the family is the source and nourishment of vocations to priesthood, religious life, and of course, married love of man and woman, and the family!).
